Truth Or Dare

Synopsis

Upscale interior designer Zoe Luce has found peace and contentment in Whispering Springs, Arizona. She has a thriving business, and she's settling into newlywed life with private investigator Ethan Truax. The threat that brought Zoe and Ethan together is finally over, ancient history, or so Zoe believes. Very few people know of her uncanny ability to sense the dark secrets hidden within the walls of a house, and she wants to keep it that way, even from Ethan. But someone is stalking Zoe - someone who knows all about her, and who shadows her every move. Is it the same person who is threatening her closest friend, Arcadia Ames, the only other person in Whispering Springs who knows the truth about Zoe? Or are Zoe and Arcadia getting tangled in a web spun by someone more dangerous than they could ever have imagined? As a private investigator, Ethan is paid to find the truth, yet he has secrets of his own that are better left buried. He can't let the threats to Zoe go unchallenged, although he fears that the truth may be a bigger burden than their still-fragile relationship can handle. And Ethan isn't alone with his fears: instead of setting her free, Zoe dreads that the truth will only imprison her once more within her darkest nightmares, this time with no escape in sight.

Zoe Luce, psychic interior decorator, has finally settled down to domestic life in Whispering Springs, Ariz., with private investigator Ethan Truax after their tempestuous courtship in Krentz's previous romantic thriller, Light in Shadow. However, sinister cobwebs of energy confront her when she enters certain rooms, threatening to make her lose her tenuous grip on sanity. Meanwhile, Arcadia

Ames, Zoe's old friend from Candle Lake Manor Psychiatric Hospital, fears the husband she sacrificed her identity to escape has finally tracked her down. Krentz never fully explains exactly why Grant, Arcadia's husband, wants her dead, relying instead on facts revealed in Light in Shadow. Indeed, from beginning to end, this sequel feels more like an appendix to the last book than a novel in its own right, as Krentz forgoes a strong central plot to focus on the kind of warm and fuzzy details about Zoe and her Whispering Springs friends that most novels relegate to the epilogue. She fattens the story with pizza dinners, heartfelt talks and proffered slices of lemon meringue pie, but scrimps when the action picks up and offers limp, far-fetched conclusions to the book's various subplots. Though no one will begrudge the goodhearted characters from Whispering Springs their tasty tidbits, in her rush to get to the happy endings, Krentz leaves readers hungry for a more substantial story. In her latest paranormal tale, Krentz takes up the story of psychic interior designer Zoe and private investigator Ethan, who met and fell in love in Light in Shadow [BKL N 1 02]. They are now working to create a successful marriage, but different events in their pasts keep interfering with their hopes for wedded bliss. Still haunted by his brother's murder and his own pursuit of justice in that case, Ethan expects Zoe to dump him, just as his previous three wives did. Zoe is plagued by memories of her imprisonment in a private psychiatric sanatorium, as she unexpectedly encounters psychic "spider webs" clinging to several places she has recently visited. As Ethan and Zoe struggle with their pasts, both become caught up in the dilemma of Zoe's friend, Arcadia, who fears that her ex-husband has returned from the dead to settle an old score. With its potent combination of danger and thrills, sexy romance, and polished writing suffused with a deliciously tart sense of humor, the best-selling Krentz's sophisticated brand of romantic suspense will never go out of style with readers. Why is this only 4 stars since it's one of my favorites? Because some of the things that other reviewers have mentioned are true. It did have enough romance for me, but I'll have to agree that there were a lot of different story threads and not much of a mystery. In that sense, the first book of the duology - "Light in Shadow" - was the stronger book. Both books are favorites, but I think I like "Truth or Dare" a bit better because I got a clearer idea of what was driving Ethan, who was a little bit too alpha hero for me in the first book. In a sense, "Light in Shadow" was Zoe's book and "Truth or Dare" is Ethan's. Bottomline - I love both of the books and think the good parts are more than worth the lack of mystery and too many plot lines.

I have so enjoyed Ms. Krentz 's writing. Over the years I have seen the progression of her talent. She has always been good, but each book just gets better.

Truth or Dare perfectly rounded out the stories started in Light and Shadow. So happy I read them both. I love Jayne Ann Krentz writing and she did not let me down

I have loved this authors books for at least 20 years. The characters are likable and almost become friends by the end of the Book. Love the suspense. I always say I am going to bed early and then my husband says ok its been 3 hours when do you plan to turn out the light, Psychic readings of rooms rooms give Zoe a feel of sadness when it comes to her spouse. Their relationship is a new one and, and she wants nothing that will cause a problem. There are a lot twist and turns in this story and I liked it a lot.

Truly enjoyed being able to continue the story of Ethan and Zoe for a little while longer. Another good book by Jayne Ann Krentz.

A fun and intriguing read with a lot of twists and turns. Just when you think you've got the answer a new twist happens.

Good read. Nice to have a second book to continue to follow the characters where the last book left off. As always her books keep me reading and trying to figure out how it will all end.
